

And then, she kissed me.

I'd long been her greatest fan. I'd long recognized her greatness and her inner beauty. I'd already fallen for her and had begun to meditate on how the vision of us together could be manifested in the physical realm.

I'd long wondered about how I would be able to have her as my woman. I'd long desired her hand in mine. I'd long wanted to hold her close to me. And then she kissed me.

I knew that we'd come together, I knew that I only needed to patiently wait. I knew that I could find a place in her heart. I knew that this tender caregiver was created for me and had now entered my life in the physical realm to bring me joy, fulfillment, and completion. And I know that I had the capacity to serve and to love her. I knew that one of our loves would manifest; and I knew that she would be able to become free with me. And then she kissed me.

I felt from the very moment that I laid eyes on her, that she was the woman that I'd envisioned and dreamed of. But, I thought she'd be Asian.

Now, I know that my life has changed forever. Now I know that my destiny is on the horizon. I know now, that my greatness and my contribution to society is wrapped in the relationship with this blessed daughter of Eset. This daughter of the Queen of Nile; who'd landed on the shores of my life.

I knew that she'd entered my life at just the right time; I knew that it was all intentional and ordained by the most-high. I knew that the Universe had authorized and blessed our union.

She shimmered as I approached her. She sparkled and glowed with a radiance that became a vortex for me. I was smitten. I was undone. I was shaking in my boots. And she still has that effect on me. What to say to this precious cosmic Nubian flower? What not to say? And then she kissed me.

I knew I had to have her; I knew that she was going to be my wife, one day. I knew that we would find our way through all of the rhetoric and through all of the tradition and through all of the questions and her concerns. I knew that we would one day merge our spirits, bodies and minds. Because she kissed me.

